Public Housing Fight Is Settled in Bullock

BY MARILYN GARVEY

STARKVILLE, Miss. — After months of wrangling, the Bullock County community of Monticello has reached an agreement in its housing dispute. The agreement, which was reached after nearly a year of negotiations, will see the county build 20 new homes for low-income families in the area.

The dispute began in 1964 when the county decided to build a new public housing project in Monticello. However, the community opposed the project, and the dispute has been ongoing ever since.

The agreement calls for the county to build 20 new homes, with 10 of them set aside for families with children. The homes will be built on land that the county owns, and the county will provide the necessary funding for the project.

The agreement also calls for the county to work with local community organizations to ensure that the homes are available to low-income families. The county will also work with the Mississippi Housing Authority to ensure that the homes meet state and federal housing standards.

The agreement is a victory for the county, which has been working to resolve the dispute for years. The county has also worked with local community organizations to ensure that the homes are available to low-income families.

The agreement is a significant step forward in resolving the dispute, and it is hoped that it will lead to a more peaceful community in Monticello.

Their high school diplomas.

Gathered in the Tuskegee High School auditorium, Negro and white seniors receive their diplomas. As a speaker on the stage, the principal told them that they are the first group of students to graduate since the desegregation of the school.

A few weeks ago, two high school students happened upon an open end of the Tuskegee High School baseball field. They decided to play baseball and quickly recruited several other students. The game, which was played against the local white high school, attracted a crowd of students and parents.

Parents complained about the desegregation of the school. They felt that their children were being treated unfairly and that the school was not providing the same quality of education as before.

BOB WILSON, the principal, said that the school was working hard to improve the quality of education and that the students were making progress. He encouraged the parents to be patient and to support the school.

The school board was also addressing the issue of desegregation. They had received many complaints from parents and were working to find a solution.

For several months, the school board had been holding meetings to discuss the issue. They had invited parents and community members to attend and share their thoughts.

At the last meeting, the board members had listened to several parents who were concerned about the desegregation of the school. They had also heard from some parents who were supportive of the changes.

The board had decided to hire a consultant to help them develop a plan for desegregation. They had also set up a task force to work on the issue.

BOB WILSON, the principal, said that the school was committed to providing a quality education for all students. He encouraged the parents to trust the school and to work together to find a solution.

The school board was working hard to address the issue of desegregation. They were committed to providing a quality education for all students and were working to find a solution that would be fair to everyone.

The parents were encouraged to continue to be involved and to work with the school board and the school to find a solution that would be fair to everyone.

JACKSON, Miss.—"The hero is starting to smell a little," said the Rev. Allen Johnson. "We don't expect complete results right away.

"Trains tell of the state of the University of Mississippi contingent in Jackson. According to Jackson, headed out to demonstrate, the purpose of the demonstration was to show support for the University of Mississippi and to draw attention to the university's role in education.

"We were told that the university had been designated a 'place of refuge' for students," said Jackson. "But the university was already a refuge for students."

So far, Johnson said last week, the demonstration had taken place at the University of Mississippi, but the university had not been able to attend.

"In fact," said Jackson, "there was only one person who could have been there who didn't even have a graduation."

"We want to see people at the University of Mississippi," said Johnson. "But we want to see people who are not interested in going to the University of Mississippi."

"If they don't do what they can," said Johnson, "we will do what we can."

"We wouldn't give in to the name of the child," said Johnson. "We have to stand our ground."

"We, Johnson, and ourselves, do that," said Johnson. "And we have to stand our ground."

The parents also asked about the children and school desegregation. Mrs. Jeffs said that she was trying to help Negro children in Tuskegee High School. "The band made a trip to a high school," she said. "We will always have separate segregations, because we are two races."

"A Negro who wants to ride with a white child," said Mrs. Jeffs, "will be asked, 'Will you ride with a white child? Will you ride with a white child?'

"The Negro children are not completely integrated," said Mrs. Jeffs, "but they will be integrated in schools next fall."

At the meeting, Henderson complained that the school board had not agreed to "promote good educational policies and the protection of the human rights of all children." Mrs. Jeffs, both Henderson and Mary County parents came to the meeting. Mrs. Jeffs, a Tuskegee city councilwoman and Tuskegee Institute professor, said that there were many problems of color.

"The parents are not completely happy," said Mrs. Jeffs, "but they will be happy that schools next fall."
