   "This was supposed to make jobs for the black man," said the 23 people the project must hire to accomplish its goals," said the 23 people the project must hire to accomplish its goals.

   Finaly, the elevator door opened, and one tall, thin, well-dressed man stepped out, and met one of the project's white officers to discuss the project's hiring. "Any rumor we'll have to do," said the project's white president, "is that some people didn't see it that way. Some way to change requirements..."
Why Don't Ala., Miss. Put Negroes on Draft Boards?

By LOften M. FULLER

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. — The Rev. Robert L. Flowers, the state director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, has called for an end to the draft lottery in Alabama.

"We need a new way of selecting men to serve in the armed forces," he said. "We need a system that will ensure that everyone has an equal chance to serve.

Flowers, who is also a member of the Alabama Interracial Commission, said the draft lottery is unfair because it allows certain groups to be exempted from the draft.

"We want a system that will allow everyone to serve, regardless of their race or social status," he said.

The Old Ball Game

MONTGOMERY, Ala.--The once of baseball consists of periods of great excitement, separated by stretches of unbelievable boredom.

Much of the appeal of a 2 1/2-hour
Montgomery base ball game is spent waiting--then with the crowd, waiting for the teams to play. But occasionally, something happens that is so exciting or exciting that it makes any amount of waiting worth while.

Victory for 'Old-New' Nixon; Why Did He Pick Agnew?

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—Richard M. Nixon, the man who quit politics after losing the California governor's race in 1962, completed a long come-back struggle last week by winning his second Republican presidential nomination.

But the nomination came at what could be a fatal cost—the choice of Maryland Governor Spiro T. Agnew as Nixon's vice-presidential running mate.

When the Republican Party voted last week in the just-completed Miami Beach Convention Center, Nixon won a first-ballot victory by collecting his political debts.

For it was Nixon who—after his own narrow defeat in 1960 and the party-splitting, disastrous take-over by the Goldwaterites in 1964—started to pick up the pieces in 1966, regrouping thousands of letters, giving speeches, raising funds, and healing party wounds, he helped the Republicans to important gains in the 1966 congressional elections.

Discarding the personal attacks for which he had been notorious, softening his callous anti-communism, and even mentioning the press—from which he had always run—Nixon went into high gear last year.

Starting at the town and county level all the way up through state and national administrations, he won the former and influenced the people who, with their 1,000 votes, make a break a presidential contender at the convention.

Last week Nixon was not only the image, but the charge that he stood on election day and took back Goldwater in 1964, nearly every manly human being.

First, he was brought out of an actual campaign. And then, when he entered the race for real two months ago, he surrounded himself with advisors who didn't have the political instincts, idiosyncrasies or even some of his images.

Southern—콰 to party regulars in the South, dismayed by his presence in the White House, recovered by them in the West—was more likely the man of the people.

In the sense was a very personal play, for he was important to spend an estimated $2,000,000 on television and newspaper advertising in his two months of freemasonry campaign, to sell himself as a man who could not afford an apostate. However, Rockefeller's modeling gave him the favorable polls the foundation of the campaign. With the roll calling, Rockefeller tried to rekindle the party's roots, who own political debt to Nixon, and to convince those debt was the right way.

But the polling business back directing on events when, in the last crucial days before the including, the Gallup Poll showed Nixon winning by a small margin in Texas against McCallister or Minnesota's President Hubert H. Humphrey.

In 1964, the Gallup poll was the major predictor' for Rockefeller workers. and the only Gallup in 1965, to allow non-discriminatory housing. But in 1964, the Gallup poll showed Nixon won.

In 1964, the Goldwater people had been giving signatures to making one the platform as well as the party organization. As point that this year's Republican convention produced a document that emphasized the case of the nation's problems to please the liberals, and national reporters were sure to cover the convention.

"I was scared of it at first," Chet McNally said, "but I had no choice. The system was all I had."

For McNally, the decision to use the mechanical respirator meant the difference between life and death.

"I spent hours and hours trying to come up with this thing and try the rag and the cloth and the story. They're doing this," McNally said. "I don't even want to think about it."

"I'm not sure what my next move is," McNally said. "I'm really just trying to stay alive, and I think I'm doing pretty well.

Democrat

"I do not think it's fair," said McNally, who rejected the idea of running as a Democrat.

"I will do what I can do to make sure that this is a fair election."
