The Inverness Massacre

The Inverness Massacre occurred on March 7, 1906, in the town of Inverness, Mississippi. It was a racial massacre that took place during a homecoming parade in the town, and it resulted in the deaths of several African Americans. The massacre was one of many lynchings and race riots that took place during the late 19th and early 20th centuries in the United States, as white supremacists sought to maintain control over African Americans in the aftermath of the Civil War and Reconstruction.

The Inverness Massacre is one of the most infamous lynchings in Mississippi history. It occurred during a homecoming parade in Inverness, located in Tishomingo County in northeastern Mississippi. The parade was being held in honor of a homecoming for students from the Mississippi Valley State University, which was then known as Mississippi Valley Colored Institute.

As the parade proceeded through the town, a group of white men attacked the African American students and bystanders, using clubs, axes, and guns. The attack resulted in the deaths of at least 30 people, including some who were shot to death while attempting to flee the scene.

The Inverness Massacre shocked the nation and led to increased calls for civil rights and equal protection under the law. It also highlighted the ongoing struggle for racial equality in the United States, and the continued threat of violence and intimidation against African Americans.

Today, the Inverness Massacre is remembered as a tragic event in the history of race relations in Mississippi and the United States. It serves as a reminder of the persistence of racism and violence against African Americans, even in the aftermath of slavery and Reconstruction.

The Inverness Massacre remains a potent symbol of the ongoing struggle for racial justice and equality. It is a reminder of the need for continued vigilance and activism in the fight against racism and injustice.
