THE SOUTHERN COURIER

Vol. IV, No. 46
Weekend Edition: November 14-16, 1968

TEN CENTS

By B.Y. SMITH

Rosedale Hails Olympic Champ

Henry Getts Gets New Superintendent

By Harry Herman

Ala., Ga. College Kids Stage Different Kinds of Protests

By Frances Myers

Foul Weather Friends

by J. Smith

By B.Y. SMITH

Black Candidates Win

By J. Smith and Freedom Information Service

Jackson, Miss.—At least 10 black candidates were named to county election commissions last week in Mississippi as the Negro electorate seeks to fill the offices vacated by the 10 Negroes who lost their seats in the state House this year.

The black candidates who won the nominations were: James E. Jefferson, who won the Place 1 position in the 8th District; Robert W. Johnson, who won the Place 2 position in the 8th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 1 position in the 9th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 2 position in the 9th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 1 position in the 10th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 2 position in the 10th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 1 position in the 11th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 2 position in the 11th District; John W. Young, who won the Place 1 position in the 12th District; and John W. Young, who won the Place 2 position in the 12th District.

In other election results, Mrs. Arline C. Williams, a former high school teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 1st District. Mrs. Williams, who has taught for 26 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Georgia, Mary L. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Georgia House of Representatives in the 5th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 20 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Dora Lee Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 4th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 15 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Gladys Mae Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 6th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 18 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Emma Lee Jones, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 7th District. Mrs. Jones, who has taught for 22 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Georgia, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Georgia House of Representatives in the 7th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Sarah Lee Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 8th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 17 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 8th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Emma Lee Jones, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 9th District. Mrs. Jones, who has taught for 22 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 9th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Sarah Lee Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 10th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 17 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 10th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Emma Lee Jones, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 11th District. Mrs. Jones, who has taught for 22 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 11th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Sarah Lee Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 12th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 17 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 12th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Emma Lee Jones, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 13th District. Mrs. Jones, who has taught for 22 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 13th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Sarah Lee Brown, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 14th District. Mrs. Brown, who has taught for 17 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 14th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Mississippi, Mrs. Emma Lee Jones, a former teacher, was elected to the Mississippi House of Representatives in the 15th District. Mrs. Jones, who has taught for 22 years, was running as a Democrat.

In Alabama, Mrs. Viola C. Johnson, a former teacher, was elected to the Alabama House of Representatives in the 15th District. Mrs. Johnson, who has taught for 21 years, was running as a Democrat.
Ten Arrested At Wallace's Rally

BY PRECILLA H. WADE
ATLANTA, Ga.—(Bureau, a student at Clark College, was one of ten people arrested here, as a Georgia town came under the dim light of the first Democratic presidential campaign. This week, local law enforcement and Wallace supporters, braced for the worst. They were correct.

"I am a poor Republican supporter," he said. "I enjoyed seeing Wallace's campaign. I thought it was very good." But the Southern Policy, which is owned and operated by a white, middle-class family, has been locked in a battle with Wallace for years. The paper's editor, John W. Sturr, has been a vocal critic of Wallace's candidacy and his policies.

"I don't think he's the answer for our country," Sturr said. "I think he's a divisive candidate, and I think he's a divisive person." But despite his reservations, Sturr said he respects Wallace's work and his commitment to the cause. "I think he's done a lot for the country," he said. "I think he's a good man."
ON THIS ROCK I’LL BUILD MY CHURCH

Some churches are built with brand-new brick, fancy wood trim, and expensive stained glass. Others are nothing more than plain wooden structures. But to the people who come to worship, it doesn't matter whether the church is plain or fancy. What matters is that it's theirs.

For a church is more than the sum of bricks, mortar, wood, and glass that went into it. Most of all, a church is people.

Photos by Kenneth W. Lumpkin
James Gray Frose 'em Out

Albany, Ga.: A Town King Couldn't Crack

BY JAMES M. FALLON

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.

In Southwest Georgia Counties

Project Challenges "Controlled Society"

In Southwest Georgia Counties

By James M. Fallon

Albany, Ga. — The headquarters of the Southeast Georgia Project are not too impressive at first glance. The small frame building on Jackson Street looks just like the other houses in the neighborhood, and the collection of papers, files, and maps doesn't seem to indicate much administrative efficiency.

But despite its informal appearance, the project is probably the brightest hope for black people in one end of the state. Here in the black-rural counties, there are few other organizations that have managed to attract the attention of black workers other than the civil rights movement. These organizations, however, have not always received the same level of support, often facing opposition or indifference from local politicians and officials.

The Southeast Georgia Project, or SEGP, is a community organizing effort that began in 1961, with the goal of improving conditions for black people in the area. It was founded by Dr. King and his people in order to address issues such as housing, education, and employment.

The project has faced many challenges, including opposition from local officials and groups, as well as a lack of resources and funding. However, it has also made significant progress in improving the lives of black residents in the area, particularly through its work on voter registration and economic development.
The following is a summary of the content of the text:

Race Relations Group Formed

BE FRANKLIN HOWARD

AVILA CITY, Ala. — The student body at the state of black-white relations at Alabama City Junior College, several students have joined forces to find a solution for the problem.

The Human Relations Council was formed a first step towards bringing the advisory system. The council is composed of a group of students on a school basis and the student body.

Several reasons were suggested for the “gap segregation.” It is being forced on someone else. Both black and white students have to do with the state of black-white relations. The council is composed of a group of students on a school basis and the student body.

Radio Station WAPX

Announcements

- WEP Radio Station
  - Huntsville, Alab.
  - The station is composed of a group of students on a school basis and the student body.

- WEUP Radio Station
  - Huntsville, Alab.
  - The station is composed of a group of students on a school basis and the student body.

- Announcements
  - The station is composed of a group of students on a school basis and the student body.

Sell the Southern Courier

For information, write to 1012 Frank L. Smith, Montgomery, 36104, or call 262-3573 in Montgomery.
Cold Can’t Stop BTW

BY MICHAEL LOTTMAN

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The Thunderbirds of Alabama Central High fell to 7-3 in a one-sided game last night, as one of the area's Craftsmen Clubs hosted theDéjà Vu. 1096.8x1692.0

Behind 5 to 4, the Wolverines reeled in one to equalize. Early in the final quarter, they stopped a Thunderbird drive at their own 25, and began to move. A 15-yd. pass from Dahlia to Edith G POWERS, a 20-yd. run to Dahlia, and 6-yd. pick-up from Dahlia to Powers, brought the Thunderbirds closer to the end zone. Then Thunderbird star Carmen Freeman, with a short pass on the line, Freeman managed through a tackle in the 20, and went in for six points, making 22-15.

And still Carmen came on. With less than five minutes to go, the Wolverines kicked a 20-yard punt, and took over on the Wolverines 35. The TWU defenders—especially John WILSON, John Ortner, and Milton WUHRER—were all over Thompson, but he managed a series completion to Pepper, and a 10-yard pass to Brine.

With just 1:45 showing on the clock, the components launched the final—Carmen Freeman, leading all scorers—on a touchdown from the 20, and added a 15-yard pass to Brine.

AFTER A BETTER TOMORROW

In Alabama all our resources are to be used, distributing, conserving, and using those resources toward the better tomorrow on this planet. For further information about the Alabama Courier, P.O. Box 703, Montgomery, Alabama.

Cleansers for Christ

A Daughter of the Church in Christ's Love, the Women's religious society of the Presbyterian Church, has organized a new women's religious society in Montgomery, Alabama.

LATT MARTIN heads another community service for WMRA listeners Dora's Red Cross radio station, serving all of Montgomery County and Central Alabama.

WMRA

112 Commerce St.
Montgomery, Ala.
204-444

The Freedom Quilling Bee

In a beautiful set of custom-designed stamps on your porch, workers working together

Beaver Bee (1000 Copy)

$1.25

Springtime Bee (1200 Copy)

$1.50

Summer Bee (1500 Copy)

$1.75

Autumn Bee (2000 Copy)

$2.00

Winter Bee (2500 Copy)

$2.50

The Freedom Quilling Bee No. 1, Box 72
Montgomery, Alabama 36107

Get THE SOUTHERN COURIER

For 3 Months

FOR ONLY $1!

(South only)

PATRONIZE OUR ADVERTISERS

Blessings

The sith the 2nd, Rev.

Fleming Freeman of Wayne, Georgia.

Lynn. Thank you and much your五金 are not

can be covered

next week. I will call

Thrice weekly. His

By the way, if you

I need to hear from whether you have

Glad you found time

me a favor.

for our March issue.

I appreciate it.

We wish to express

Blessings