Auburn Private School Has Money Problems

By Kenneth Goff

An appeal has been filed for the Auburn private school over its financial status.

The school, which was founded in 1834, is facing financial difficulties due to a lack of funding.

The school is one of the oldest private schools in the state and has been in operation for over 150 years.

In the meantime, the Alabama State Department of Education has been monitoring the school's finances and has expressed concerns about its financial stability.

Auburn Private School has been facing a financial crisis in recent years, with the school's endowment fund depleted and the cost of tuition rising.

The school has been unable to raise enough funds to meet its financial obligations, leading to a situation where it may be forced to close its doors.

The school's administration has been working with state officials to find a solution to the financial crisis, but so far, no definite plans have been made.

Parents and students are concerned about the school's future and are urging the state to provide financial assistance to help keep the school open.

[Further details on the school's financial situation and any potential solutions to the crisis.]

Things Every Voter Should Know

BY GAIL FALK

The next Negro to be registered to vote in Marshall County would be a "hotline" to the local voter registration office.

In Marshall County

MULLY SPENCER, Miss.-Last week, Alfred Robinson, the local Negro registering Negro voters in Marshall County, said he was all but convinced that the black voter would be heard.

"I'm not being optimistic," he said. "I don't think the white voter will be heard."

The self-styled "hotline" was also the scene of a dramatic showdown with the local NAACP.

Robinson, who runs the NAACP's voter registration program in the county, was there to register a new Negro voter. But he was also there to register a new Negro voter who was also a candidate for black sheriff. Malcolm Barlett, a white man, is the third candidate for the office.

In Marshall County, there are only two Negro candidates running for public office. The Rev. Bishop Trucy, a black man, is running for supervisor of education. The Rev. Marshall Johnson, a black man, is running for sheriff.

"I don't think they will let me register anyone," Robinson said. "But I think they will let me register my ballot in a special envelope."

He Doesn’t See Any More Election

BY PATRICK JAMES

BERMUDA, Va._"Do youngsters fight a lot, but since his operation he has been much more mellow. He doesn’t desar violence, either. I have asked Mrs. Hurd, Mrs. Hurd, Jr., as an example. I asked Mr. Hurd, Mr. Hurd, Jr., and he said, ‘Yes, we have found that this is the case. We have noticed a great reduction in the number of fights we see among the children in our neighborhood.’"

"This is a very important issue for us," said Mrs. Crowell. "We want to see progress on the question of community organization and political education." She added that the meeting was called by the Tallasga NAACP, which is working to organize the community.

What Happened to Jackson Boycott?

By BERTIE RUSH

JACKSON, Miss. — Why can’t the boycott work any longer? And why don’t the civil rights leaders work together?

There were two questions of the day from the chief editor of the Mississippi Citizen Action Committee 11 Friday night at the Gerber Hotel, Jackson’s American Bismarck of the South.

The meeting was called after the mayor gave a report that Jackson’s black leaders had decided against a boycott of white businesses.

Mississippi was killed May 12 during the demonstrations at Jackson State College.

During his report, Judge E. E. Paradise, chairman of the board, said the fight was won.

In the evening, the Rev. S. N. Johnson, civil rights leader, said that volunteers who are on the job.

Judy canvased, said Mississippi Stillman's, the Ku Klux Klan, and said that volunteers who are on the job.

It was pointed out that most of the business owners who had been affected by the boycott of white businesses had decided against a boycott of white businesses.
